Fire & Rescue Services Finding Aid

This finding aid contains lists of records of the Central Scotland Fire & Rescue Service and its predecessors.

Administrative History

Prior to 1938, burghs, counties and large businesses operated their own separate fire brigades. The Fire Brigades Act, 1938, set up a centrally co-ordinated service throughout the UK and required local authorities to make arrangements for an effective fire service. In 1938 there were 185 fire brigades in Scotland. In 1941, as a consequence of the war, a National Fire Service was established and this remained in place until the introduction of the Fire Services Act 1947, which returned the service to the control of local authorities, who were permitted to form joint arrangements for the administration of both police and fire services. Local government re-organisation in 1975 gave responsibility for fire brigades to the Regional Councils and the area boundaries were adjusted to match the regional boundaries. In 1996 the Fire Brigades were re-established as independent joint local authorities with representation on their boards from the relevant unitary Councils. They retained the same boundaries as the pre-1996 regions. In 2004 the Fire Brigades changed their names to Fire and Rescue Services.

Central Area Fire Brigade was formed in 1947 when the Fire Services Act, 1947, restored responsibility for fire brigades to local authorities after the wartime National Fire Service. Under this legislation, joint arrangements were possible and therefore Stirling, Clackmannan and Dunbartonshire set up a joint fire brigade. Stations included Dumbarton, Alloa, Balfroun, Stirling, Bridge of Allan, Larbert and Falkirk.

Central Region Fire Brigade was formed as a result of Local Government reform on 16th May, 1975 from part of the former Central Area Fire Brigade, part of the South Eastern Area Fire Brigade and part of Perth and Kinross Fire Brigade. In 1996 the name was changed to Central Scotland Fire Brigade without changes in boundaries. On 17th September 2004 the Brigade changed its name to Central Scotland Fire and Rescue Service.

The Service covers the areas of Clackmannanshire, Falkirk and Stirling Councils - an area of 2,652 square kilometres with a population of 281,600. The Service is governed by the Central Scotland Joint Fire and Rescue Board which consists of eleven members, three from Stirling Council, six from Falkirk Council and two from Clackmannanshire Council. The motto is "Protecting the Heart of Scotland".
